The article emphasized that the GDIC was in no way connected with the "resistance" a national anti-war group.

The article reported that GDIC planned to compile a file concerning information about draft boards around the country, as well as a list of draft information centers. The article reported that the GDIC was trying to locate lawyers and other professionals who would assist with the GDIC work.

The article noted that although a chairman for GDIC had not yet been selected, the group held its first meeting on 9/14/69, and about 30 Grinnell students attended, six of whom had had draft counseling experience. The article reported that the GDIC was going to set up a training program for others who were interested in counseling experience.
